More Tips to Help You Prepare For Storms

Hurricane season officially began on June 1. If your business was impacted by a natural disaster, would you be prepared? The last thing you want to deal with is losing your data or your clients' data. Each month, we'll be sharing some tips on how you can reduce your risk for impact from powerful storms. This month we're focusing on disaster recovery plans.

Here are ten must-have items your disaster recovery plan needs. Since every business is different, a proper disaster recovery plan -or DR plan- should be customized to fit your organization. The plan should include documented processes and procedures to recover and protect your IT infrastructure in case of a disaster.

Employee Spotlight

Alexi Pappas is a Senior Auditor. She has been with Carolinas IT for a year. She's originally from Orlando, FL. Her favorite part of her job is working with her manager, Greg Manson, who is the Director of Audit and Compliance. "He keeps the department fun while providing challenging work that results in continuous and new learning experiences," she says.

Alexi enjoys our monthly company meetings because it gives her the opportunities to see all of her co-workers and mingle. "Carolinas IT is a tight-knit family that you don't usually get at any other company," Alexi says proudly.

Alexi is an accomplished Yogi (you should see her handstand!) who focuses a lot of time on perfecting her art when she's not working. She also enjoys spending time with her dachshund. "He's willing to go and do anything I'm up for, including hiking," she says. She recently passed the ISACA Certified Information Systems Auditor (CISA) exam.
